FUNDING
All Canadian (or P.R.) undergraduate students in Arts and Science may be eligible for the Global Skills Opportunity funding. If eligible, students may receive up to $2000* toward the program fees. (*students who have received the GSO previously are not eligible).

This project is partially funded by the Government of Canada’s Outbound Student Mobility Pilot Program

COURSE DESCRIPTION
The Netherlands is home to international courts, such as the International Court of Justice and the International Criminal Court. This study abroad course examines the work of international courts and how public international law works to protect individuals from some of the worst abuses humans can inflict on each other. As an experiential learning course, students are able to pair what they learned in lectures with increased knowledge of the institutions housed in the Hague, and the international challenges they aim to address, from within their very walls.

COURSE OVERVIEW
Recognizing that hearing from the very people who live the institutions each day and experiencing the buildings, the courtrooms, and even the streets and cities of the institutions has a significant bearing on one’s understanding of the institutions and their work, the course aims to introduce key information and concepts about some of the world’s most powerful and influential legal institutions simultaneously with students’ experiencing the institutions.

Students must have a minimum of 30 cu and an overall average no lower than 65%.
